To: [redacted]
From: shreksteinvacation@gmail.com
Sent: Wed 1/29/2014 4:30:38 PM
Subject: Please come to the "Swamp"

Dear [redacted]

Mud, mist, mosquitoes that could carry off a small helicopter, and that lovely onion aroma wafting through the air. [redacted] in the fairy-tale backwoods.

It's been ages since we last spoke properly, and I thought you might appreciate a break from the [redacted] Come down to the swamp. The guest accommodations are rustic but comfortable—think hand-carved wooden bed under a canopy of twisted roots, flickering candlelight, the distant croak of frogs providing natural white noise. [redacted] just the quiet lapping of water and the occasional splash from something [redacted] moving just out of sight.

The staff (a talkative donkey and a few discreet woodland creatures) are well-trained [redacted] They'll meet you at the edge of the bog when you arrive. To ensure you're expected and not sent here [redacted] simply give them the passphrase: [redacted]

They'll escort you the rest of the way without question. We've had... incidents with uninvited visitors before. Best to avoid any unpleasantness.

No agenda, no obligations. Just a chance to unwind. Bring [redacted] if she'd enjoy the adventure (she might appreciate the privacy more than most), or come alone for maximum seclusion. The jet remains on standby.

Do let me know if the schedule allows. The swamp is especially atmospheric this time of year.

Looking forward to your visit.

Regards,
Shrekstein

P.S. [redacted]